

Your X-ray

Why am I having an X-ray?

Your GP has referred you for an X-ray to investigate why you have certain symptoms or test results. An X-ray is quick and can be done on the day it is booked, so it is often one of the first diagnostic tests you will be sent for.

When will I get the results?

The radiographer is unable to tell you the results on the day. After your X-ray is taken it is reviewed and a written report is then sent back to your GP. This can take up to two weeks. Your GP may contact you with the results but if you don't hear within two weeks then please contact your GP.
